Mission Statement

Founded in 1997, The Journal of Law in Society is a student-managed publication of Wayne State University Law School that provides scholarly discourse on the intersection of law and society. Each year, the Journal identifies a range of issues affecting Detroit and other parts of the world, and then publishes articles that address those issues within their social context. By way of research and scholarship, the Journal aims to connect Detroit to broader national and international discourse, as well as serve as an educational and practical tool for its audience.

Subscriptions

With a subscription to The Journal of Law in Society, you will receive one volume of Journal issues (two issues). If you provide your e-mail address, we will also notify you of Journal symposia. Funds from subscriptions help support the Journal, a non-profit student-managed publication. To subscribe to the Journal, please mail the form below and your payment to:
