The Race Card Wall Project Comes to Wayne Law!

The Law Library would like to invite Wayne Law students, faculty, alumni and community members to participate in the Race Card Wall Project.

Purpose of the Project

The Project was conceived by journalist Michele Norris to spark dialog about race in America. To date, more than 60,000 cards are posted in displays around the country.

How to Participate

The library’s glass entranceway serves as the display wall for the Project’s Law Library location. Please use the markers provided near the wall to write one 6-word sentence about what race means to you. You may post more than one card. Then use the tape provided to attach your “brick” to the glass. The bricks may be read on the glass wall by passersby outside the library’s doors, or from within.

If you wish to share more than a 6-word phrase or sentence, you also may write “digital bricks” at the Project’s website: https://theracecardproject.com/.

Project Kick-Off

The Law Library’s Race Card Wall opens on November 1. There will be a campus-wide kickoff for the Project on Monday, November 5 from 3-5PM in the Undergraduate Library. The Project walls in the 5 WSU campus libraries will remain in place through the end of the calendar year. Then the “bricks” will be sent to the national headquarters for the Race Card Wall Project.

We hope you will stop by the Law Library to contribute to the Race Card Wall during the next several weeks – and read the contributions of others as well.
